SCENARIO CARD 1-A · WHO AM I?

THE SITUATION

Marcus shared on his identity web that he loves drawing comics. A classmate said, "That's babyish." Marcus feels embarrassed and wishes he had said something else.

DISCUSSION QUESTIONS

Is Marcus's love of comics part of who he truly is? Why does a classmate's comment make him want to hide it? What is the difference between something being part of your identity and something being "cool" according to others? What would you say to Marcus to help him hold his identity with confidence?

SCENARIO CARD 1-B · WHO AM I?

THE SITUATION

Amara is filling out her strengths inventory and cannot think of a single thing to write. She keeps crossing things out. "I'm not really good at anything," she tells her partner. Her partner looks surprised.

DISCUSSION QUESTIONS

Why might Amara struggle to name her own strengths, even though others can see them? What is the difference between a strength you were born with and one you developed through effort? If you were Amara's partner, what specific strength might you have already noticed about her in just this one class?

UNIT 1 · LESSON 2 · EMOTIONS ARE INFORMATION

SCENARIO CARD 1-C · EMOTIONS ARE INFORMATION

THE SITUATION

During a math test, Jayla's mind goes blank even though she studied. She feels a wave of panic. After the test: "I hate when that happens — my feelings always ruin everything."

DISCUSSION QUESTIONS

What message was Jayla's panic actually trying to send her? Is Jayla's emotion the problem — or is it a messenger pointing at a different problem? If Jayla could name the emotion precisely, how might that help her next time?

SCENARIO CARD 1-D · EMOTIONS ARE INFORMATION

THE SITUATION

Deon gets in the car after school and says "Fine" when asked about his day — but he actually felt lonely, left out, and invisible. He didn't have words for it.

DISCUSSION QUESTIONS

What emotions was Deon actually feeling? Can you name them more precisely than "fine"? What message were those emotions trying to carry? Why might it be hard to share emotions, even when we do have words for them?
