Before You Begin

How this edition differs — and why

This edition holds the same curriculum, taught with concrete language, rule-based logic, and visible body scaffolding. The constructs are not diluted — they are translated. Where a construct cannot be translated without losing its meaning, it is REPLACED rather than rendered into something it is not. Those replacements are named explicitly in this note. We do not pretend they are the original lesson.

What this edition KEEPS, with translation

- Mask vs. Mirror translated as Inside Me / Outside Me — same construct, body-anchored language.
- The Social Battery preserved (it is already a concrete metaphor with strong autism-research support).
- Forgiveness vs. Reconciliation preserved with the rule-card framing: “Forgive = I am free. Reconcile = we are together. Different things. Both are choices.”
- The Boundary of Peace preserved as a simple two-rule chart: Wall / Door — pick one. Both are okay.
- The Pause Practice preserved, reduced from 4 steps to 2: NOTICE → ASK.
- All Crisis Resources content preserved in full. The autism-adolescent suicide-risk addendum is non-negotiable at every support level.

What this edition REPLACES (and what we put in instead)

- The Authenticity Gradient (U1L4) is REPLACED with a 3-point scale: Performing / Half / Me. The 5-point gradient introduces calibration nuance that creates more confusion than insight at this support level.
- The Groupthink Trap (U1L5) is REPLACED with The Group Said vs. I Think. Same construct — agreement is a choice, dissent is allowed — reduced to two columns.
- Reclaiming the Narrative (U2L4) is REPLACED with The Story Chart. Same three chapters, anchored to a literal storyboard with student name and the year written across it.
- Sustainable Accountability four-step (U2L3) is REPLACED with a three-step: SAY IT / FIX IT / KEEP GOING. Step 2 of the original (Repair) and Step 4 (Move On) carried — Step 3 of the original (Commit) folded into FIX IT.
- Calling In vs. Calling Out (U3L4) is REPLACED with WHO DO I TELL? Same construct — different audiences for different situations — translated into a decision tree the student can follow concretely.
- Charitable Interpretation (U4L2) is preserved but reduced to two steps with the Pattern-Tracking Guardrail held in front, not behind, the lesson.

ON THIS EDITION

Moderate-support students are full participants in this curriculum. The translation choices in this edition follow the editorial discipline established in Books 1–3: do not perform inclusion by pushing a lesson the student cannot use. Translate when translation preserves meaning. Replace when it does not. Name the replacement. The student’s right to access the curriculum is honored by giving them a lesson that actually works in their nervous system — not a watered-down version of one that does not.

ON FLEXIBLE SUPPORT LEVELS

Several students who function with lower support needs in some environments may function with moderate support needs in others — the cafeteria, the hallway, the fire drill, the substitute teacher day, the first week back from a break. Have the Moderate

Support charts available as a co-resource in your classroom. The student gets to choose which set of charts they look at on any given day. The choice is theirs.

Inside Me / Outside Me

What people see · What is actually true

★ PPRA

OUTSIDE ME	INSIDE ME
The me people see.	The me that is real.

OUTSIDE	INSIDE
• My face. • My voice in school. • What I post. • How I act in class.	• What I am thinking. • What I am feeling. • What I am tired of. • What I really like.

It is okay if Outside and Inside are not the same.

IN THIS ROOM
✓ You can stim. ✓ You can look away. ✓ You can be quiet. ✓ You do not have to pretend.

SPECIALIST NOTE · FOR THE TEACHER

Day-One posting. Read the IN THIS ROOM box aloud. For moderate-support autistic students, masking is often more visible than for lower-support peers — voice flatness, posture stiffness, the freeze of trying to look 'right.' The unmasking permission here is concrete: four ticks, four behaviors, no abstractions. The student who points to one of the ticks is communicating. Honor it. Do not require them to label it as masking.

POST Day 1. Most important posting.	KEEP All year.

My Battery

Full • Half • Empty

★ PPRA
 FULL I can do school. I can do people.	 HALF I am tired. I need a break soon.	 EMPTY I cannot do more. I need quiet now.

HOW EMPTY FEELS IN MY BODY
Head — Foggy. Words won't come.
Chest — Tight. Heavy.
Eyes — Looking at people hurts.
Whole body — Heavy. Tired. Done.

IF... My battery is on EMPTY.	THEN... I can ask for: a break, headphones, my quiet spot. This is not laziness. This is empty.
---	--

SPECIALIST NOTE • FOR THE TEACHER The 3-level battery is more usable than the lower-support gradient at this support level. The body-map is critical — many moderate-support students do not yet have language for interoceptive states and rely on body location as their primary access point. Teach the body map before teaching the language. A student who points to 'chest tight' is reporting empty. Honor it without requiring verbal escalation. Watch for the same early-burnout pattern flagged in the LS edition: students running on empty by mid-October need a workload reduction, not a 'push through.'

POST Day 1.	KEEP All of Unit 1 and beyond.
