The Architecture of Grace

Anchor Charts — A K–12 Sampler

One lesson, every grade band. Follow the identity anchor chart from kindergarten to graduation and watch a single wall display grow in structure as students mature — from a five-branch web to the threshold of adulthood.

A preview; the full chart packs ship separately.

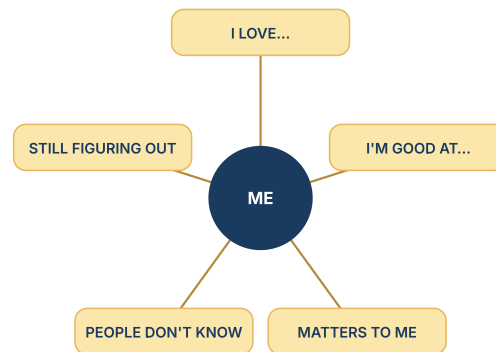

How One Chart Grows Up

The identity question gets its own anchor chart in every band. The chart's structure deepens with the student: a hub-and-branch web in the early years, a two-column contrast in middle school, a three-column gradient in high school, and finally the threshold of leaving and arriving.

Read it as a single arc. The branches a five-year-old draws around their name are the same self the eleventh-grader carries to the threshold — only the questions have grown sharper. Every chart here is transcribed directly from the curriculum.

The Identity Web

Every web is valid. Every answer is right.

Mask vs. Mirror — Two-Column Display

THE MASK

- What I show others
- What I perform
- What I hide
- What I emphasise

THE MIRROR

- What is actually there
- My real opinions
- My actual struggles
- What I value

The gap between these two is where the cost lives.

The Authenticity Gradient

SELECTIVE

- Choosing what to share
- Not the whole truth — but not a lie
- Context-appropriate

CURATED

- Actively managing image
- Technically accurate but misleading
- Performative

INAUTHENTIC

- Actively presenting a false identity
- High performance tax
- Relational cost

The question is not whether we present differently — it is whether the gap is costing more than it gives.

The Threshold — Leaving & Arriving

WHAT YOU ARE LEAVING

- The identity context you built yourself in
- The people who know your history
- The version built for this environment

WHAT YOU ARE ARRIVING INTO

- Where none of your prior architecture exists
- Where you introduce yourself anew
- Where you choose, from scratch, who shows up

Of everything you have been — what do you carry through the threshold, and what do you leave behind?
